NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

WILLIAM ASHBROOK, Professor of Opera and Humanities, Philadelphia College of the Performing Arts, is the author of the authoritative "Donizetti and his operas" (1982). He has contributed widely to Donizettian studies throughout the world. A critical edition of POLIUTO is expected shortly. He will take up a new post at Indiana State University this summer.

JOHN BLACK originally intended to make a career as a conductor but after the war took a degree in Agriculture and held University appointments in Adelaide, Edinburgh and London. Specialises in the Italian romantic libretto and librettists. Presently Director and Secretary of the Wolfson Foundation.

GENE.J.CHO Ph.D (music theory), North-western University, Ill. U.S.A.; theory pedagogist, ethnomusicologist; Associate Professor, Co-ordinator of Theory; School of Music, North Texas State University. Author of two training manuals in aural skills and keyboard harmony; articles in Chinese music.

JEREMY COMMONS. Born and brought up in New Zealand, he teaches English literature at Victoria University, Wellington. Is an authority on all aspects of Italian opera of the early nineteenth century and has made important contributions to the study of Censorship in Bourbon Naples.

LEYLA GENCER, the distinguished Turkish soprano, has been responsible for many remarkable operatic revivals including works by Verdi and Donizetti, Rossini and Pacini. She has embodied those vocal and intellectual gifts that have made the rediscovery of the primo Ottocento such a dramatic event.

THOMAS G. KAUFMAN, while finding a career in International Chemistry, is a specialist in the opera of the Ottocento. He has contributed articles to the Record Collector; the Institute of Verdi Studies; for the San Francisco Opera; the Opera Orchestra of New York; for CBS Records; MRF Records; as well as for this Journal and other such publications. He is currently working on performance history of the Ottocento.

ROGER PARKER is Assistant Professor of Music at Cornell University. He has published articles on Verdi in Music Analysis; 19th-Century Music; Revue de Musicologie; Journal of the American Musicological Society and other journals. He is at present working on a study of LA BOHÈME for Cambridge University Press, and an edition of NABUCCO for the "Complete Works of Giuseppe Verdi".

FULVIO LO PRESTI was born at Catania, after studies at Naples in the language and literature of the Netherlands took up a position in Brussels in the linguistic service of the EEC. He is operatic Consultant for the Rotterdam Opera and a collaborator in the revue Musica.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

These are due to our contributors, above all for their patience, in that more time has elapsed than was anticipated since the last issue of this Journal. Our many subscribers too must be gratefully thanked for their forebearance. Special thanks must go to Dr. Fulvio Lo Presti who provided so many of the illustrations; to the National Portrait Gallery, London, who kindly gave permission to reproduce an historic painting in the National collection; to the Civica Raccolta A. Bertarelli di Milano for supplying photographs of the many prints in their unparalleled collection - including that on the cover of this Journal; to the Biblioteca del Conservatorio di Bologna; to the Biblioteca Civica Ursino Recupero di Catania; to Mr. Stephen Hastings for his translation of Madame Gencer's peroration.
